NOTICE

The public can access electronic court files. For privacy and security reasons, papers filed with the court should therefore not contain: an individual's full social security number or full birth date; the full name of a person known to be a minor; or a complete financial account number. A filing may include only: the last four digits of a social security number; the year of an individual's birth; a minor's initials; and the last four digits of a financial account number. See Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 5.2.

I. BASIS FOR JURISDICTION

Federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction (limited power). Generally, only two types of cases can be heard in federal court: cases involving a federal question and cases involving diversity of citizenship of the parties. Under 28 U.S.C. § 1331, a case arising under the United States Constitution or federal laws or treaties is a federal question case. Under 28 U.S.C. § 1332, a case in which a citizen of one State sues a citizen of another State or nation, and the amount in controversy is more than $75,000, is a diversity case. In a diversity case, no defendant may be a citizen of the same State as any plaintiff.

What is the basis for federal-court jurisdiction in your case?

- Federal Question
- Diversity of Citizenship

A. If you checked Federal Question

Which of your federal constitutional or federal statutory rights have been violated?

15 U.S.C. 1681g(e)(1) , 1681h(e), 1681n, and 1681s-2;

15 U.S.C. 1692e (5);

Massachusetts General Law Chapter 93, Sections 54A, 58, 63, 64 and 68, and Chapter 93A, Sections 2 and 9; and

New York Consolidated Laws General Business Laws sections 601 and 604-A.

B. If you checked Diversity of Citizenship

1. Citizenship of the parties

Of what State is each party a citizen?

The plaintiff, _____, is a citizen of the State of (Plaintiff's name)

(State in which the person resides and intends to remain.)

or, if not lawfully admitted for permanent residence in the United States, a citizen or subject of the foreign state of _____

If more than one plaintiff is named in the complaint, attach additional pages providing information for each additional plaintiff.

If the defendant is an individual:

The defendant, _____, is a citizen of the State of

or, if not lawfully admitted for permanent residence in the United States, a citizen or subject of the foreign state of _____.

If the defendant is a corporation:

The defendant, _____, is incorporated under the laws of the State of _____

and has its principal place of business in the State of _____ or is incorporated under the laws of (foreign state) _____ and has its principal place of business in _____.

If more than one defendant is named in the complaint, attach additional pages providing information for each additional defendant.

Section III Statement of Claim

1. I maintained a residence in Springfield, MA since 2014 where I received Verizon services that were paid for in full each month; I met in person a Verizon representative at my residence who took copies of my IDs, including a government-issued ID, in setting up the service. I currently maintain a residence in New York, NY where I receive Verizon services that are paid for in full each month; a Verizon representative likewise met me there to set up the service. In all times since 2014 Verizon has had in its possession my successive addresses and a mobile phone number that has remained unchanged. My family owned - but I have never inhabited - another property in South Hadley, MA, which was rented out in 2015 and 2016.
2. In 2016, I was contacted by a collection agency, McCarthy, Burgess & Wolff, which claimed to be collecting on a debt originated with a Verizon account, xxxxxxxxxxxx7092. I did not recognize the account and, at the collection agency's instruction, called Verizon and spoke to Eva at Billing and Sales, Dara at Financial Services, Kesha at Customer Service, Mr. White at Account Verification and some other people at other departments (all the personal names are phonetic approximations). I explained that I did not recognize the account in question, which never appeared on my monthly Verizon bills, that the address associated with the account was occupied by tenants and never by me, and that I also suspected whether Verizon's sales people secretly added unwanted products to my existing Verizon service without my knowledge; I asked for an investigation. I was promised one and assured the 2015 services would be closed and no payment would be collected. I also contacted McCarthy, Burgess & Wolff again and reported my conversations with Verizon; the collection agency, too, agreed to close the collection account and made no further collection attempt since then.
3. On July 10, 2017, I requested and received credit reports from three credit bureaus in planning to buy a home and to apply for a mortgage. On those reports there were a few bank accounts, addresses, and an employment record that I did not recognize, as well as a collection record concerning the Verizon account that was reported on July 1, 2017. The Verizon account gave no indication that Verizon had been notified both by me and by McCarthy, Burgess & Wolff that the account was disputed and that fraud was suspected. In failing to properly annotate the reported account, Verizon ignored its duties under 15 U.S.C. § 1681c(f) and 1681s-2 of Fair Credit Reporting Act and Chapter 93, Section 54A of Massachusetts General Law. Verizon also appeared to have no taken investigation as required by Section 54A, at least none that I was made aware of and asked to partake of.
4. I immediately called Verizon, spoke successively to Amanda at Customer Service, Jordan at Credit Verification and was finally transferred to Ms. Jones at Account Verification. All three said there was no case or notes added to my account in 2016, although Ms. Jones opened an investigation and asked for utility bills that could prove my Springfield, MA address in 2015. I pointed out that Verizon was long in possession of my proof of address because I had and continued to have active and continuous Verizon home service there. Verizon thus accepted its own statements as adequate proof of address. I also contacted McCarthy, Burgess & Wolff again and spoke to a Lalene Barnett who told me that the collection agency had indeed stopped any collection effort because the debt was “recalled” by Verizon in August 2016. I likewise contacted the other furnishers of records that I could not recognize. I also wrote to the credit bureaus to dispute these records. As an additional note, none of these erroneous records, save for the Verizon account, was in default or labeled negative or derogatory on my credit reports.

5. On August 8, I received a letter dated July 25 from Verizon Account Verification, informing me that they were contacted by the credit reporting agencies and telling me to call them by August 1. I called on August 9 and first spoke with a Ms. Charles and then a supervisor named Ms. Detances. The latter stated that a) her department was too big and she did not know Mr. White and the latter left no annotation from my earlier calls; b) there was a notification from another department, Fraud/Credit Reporting, that said the matter was addressed; however, the note or the identity of its author was not visible to her because it was not her department; and c) the collection agency had informed her department in August 2016 that the debt could not be verified, and her department opened an investigation four months later on Nov. 29, 2016 – she could not name the steps taken in that investigation or the outcome of it (and these steps certainly did not involve contacting me). Ms. Detances blamed the problem on her department’s inability to access records and notes generated by other departments and promised to have higher Verizon authorities who had the power to review records from various departments to better investigate the matter. Rita Johnson at Executive Response and Camille at Triple Escalation Team called me later that month to inform me that they had made annotations on the account available to Account Verification Center, which was supposed to be the Verizon organ that dealt with the Credit Reporting Agencies, and persuaded me to cooperate with the latter in the investigation.

6. The investigation was then overtaken by a veritable circular firing squad at the Account Verification Center: i) a Ms. Thompson instructed me to file a police report and send a copy of my driver’s license. I did both and faxed them over. ii) Days later, a Ms. Martin informed me that while Verizon received my files, a driver’s license with my most current address was needed, as well as my Social Security Card. iii) Because I was moving to another state and did not want the application for a new state ID to hold up the investigation, I requested that Verizon accept the substitute of a copy of my passport; I was therefore connected with a supervisor at Account Verification, Ms. Michely, who concluded that proof of current address and Social Security Card were not needed in my case (in that I was a current Verizon customer and had residential services with Verizon) and undertook to “heavily” annotate the case so that no future Verizon employee would be confused about the requirement for identity documentation, and she further promised to have Mr. Barros, the most senior person at Account Verification, to call me within 24-48 hours to clarify the list of documentation needed. iv) I spoke with Rita Johnson again, who accepted the substitution of my passport for my driver’s license and promised to note so in the account. v) When I got no calls from Mr. Barros, I called Account Verification Center again and spoke with Ms. Charles, who denied seeing any notes from

Rita Johnson at Executive Response and Camille at Triple Escalation Team or from Ms. Michely – and who insisted on having my proof of address and social security card before she would proceed with the case; then Ms. Charles proceeded to again “heavily annotat[e]” the account so that no future Verizon representative would be deluded into thinking that a brand new driver’s license and my social security card might not be needed.

7. At that point, I concluded that I could no longer expect Verizon to give a coherent answer over the phone, with its Executive Response, Triple Escalation Team, and Account Verification Center (including several tiers and factions within the Account Verification Center) each vehemently repudiating the annotations left by each other and contradicting the instructions given to me by each other. I resorted to writing over the next three months and communicated via emails, post, and fax, requesting that Verizon would likewise respond in writing and give a definitive list of documentation and clear procedure of its investigation and the cooperation they would need from me. I never again received any response from any Verizon representative in the form of email, post or fax or promised callback. Verizon’s disorganization, poor record-keeping, and breakdown in internal communications, prevented Verizon from commencing any meaningful investigation, much less a reasonable one as mandated by 15 U.S.C.1681 and Chapter 93 of Massachusetts General Law, despite the abundance of recordings of customer calls, memos and annotations made on its internal system, account statements, letters and electric correspondences with customers and its debt collectors that Verizon has in its possession. I ceased my effort to reach out to Verizon only three months later when I decided to try a different tack and posted copies of my passport and police report directly to the three credit bureaus, which removed all records of the Verizon account and collection endeavors from my credit files between November and December.
8. I also requested from Ms. Johnson on November 16 and December 7, 2017 “all business records pertaining to the opening of the account in question, including those records - paperwork, emails, letters, audio recordings, etc. - that Verizon has in dealing with its collection agency.” Verizon took no actions on these requests, airily ignoring my right as embedded in 15 U.S.C.1681g(e) and in New York Consolidated Laws General Business Laws section 604-A.1 through 604-A.7. In fact, I did not – and still have not – receive any statements or bills directly from Verizon regarding this account, despite the variety of venues Verizon regularly used to contact me, especially given the story I was told in my initial call to Verizon that the account existed for several months and the balance on the account accrued over several months. Even discounting the question marks over the setup of the account, one must object to Verizon’s failure to bill and issue periodic statements to the very person whom Verizon argued it had associated with the account. Verizon’s 2015 failure to properly bill me, which would have immediately alerted me to the existence of this account and to take actions to close the account, may have boosted

Section IV: Relief

12. I started traveling to New York and spent weekends in August, September, and October going to open houses for sale in the city, each new weekend with the renewed hope that Verizon would somehow clean up its mess very soon and remove the sole negative/derogatory account on my credit reports so that I would be able start a loan application and buy one of those houses. All told, I spent three months in this endeavor and visited around one hundred open houses before a painful realization sank in in November that Verizon was never going to act. I then decided instead to take all the documentation directly to the three credit bureaus to ask them to undertake their own investigations. This Equifax, Experian and Trans Union all did between late November and December: the three CRAs removed the account from my credit reports, and I restarted my visits to the open houses in January 2018 and entered an agreement on January 22, applied for and locked the interest rate on a 30-year home mortgage from Wells Fargo on January 26, and completed the purchase in April. For the cost of travel to New York City in August 2017 and for the loss of time in countless open house visits that were eventually made pointless by Verizon's actions, I sue for $10,000 in damages.
13. At the time of my mortgage application, the mortgage officer told me that the rate on 30-year home loan had been rising in late 2017 and that my rate could have been 0.25% lower merely a month ago in December 2017. Other New York-area banks that I visited told a similar story, with bankers at some branches telling me their rates for the type of mortgage I was looking for had risen 0.25% or 0.375% since autumn 2017. These accounts cohere also with the statistics compiled by Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis (<https://fred.stlouisfed.org/graph/?g=NUh>), which shows an average increase of 0.33% among the nation's banks in the 30-year fixed rate mortgage between August 31, 2017, about 30 days after Verizon received inquiries from the credit bureaus for the account, and January 25, 2018, which was about time I locked in my rate. Had Verizon followed a reasonable protocol and completed its investigations as required by federal and state laws, I could have procured a home loan at a rate about 0.33% than what I currently have. A 0.33% differential on a loan of the size I was eventually approved for and obtained means a $55,593.79 difference in total interest payment. For the loss of credit opportunities and the higher rate and interest I am now paying, I sue for $55,593.79 in damages.
14. In August 2017, my family entered a three-month lease, from September to December, for an apartment in New York. We chose short term rental because we had expected to purchase our own apartment quickly. However, we had to repeatedly renew the lease - eventually for four additional months at $3,350/month - when it became obvious that we could not even put down an offer for a new home before either Verizon or the credit bureaus completed their investigations. For this additional cost due to the loss of credit opportunities, I sue for $13,400 in damages.

Verizon's 2015 revenue, but this billing practice in itself violated the consumer protection afforded by Massachusetts General Law Chapter 93A against unfair commercial practices and must further raise doubts about the legitimacy and legality of the original debt that Verizon claimed to have occurred on the account.

9. There were numerous moments in 2016 (when I first disputed the account and alerted Verizon of the possible fraud or when McCarthy, Burgess & Wolff alerted Verizon of the dispute and suspicion of fraud) and in 2017 (when the credit bureaus twice reported my disputes) that a robust investigative mechanism, reasonably designed and reasonably implemented and triggered within a reasonable timeframe, could have easily put a stop to this whole affair. Only reckless and gross negligence and utter callousness towards its customers and victims of a possible identity theft can explain Verizon behavior in 2016 and 2017. I argue that Verizon violated 15 U.S.C.1681n and 1681s-2 in this gross negligence and gravely hurt my rights as a consumer of credit and victim of identity fraud.
10. If Verizon took no steps to investigate the account, however, it was not actually sitting idly: Apparently, after I notified Verizon in August 2017 of the monetary damages I was suffering and demanded compensations, Verizon stealthily bought back the alleged debt on the account that it had previously sold to debt collection agencies. I did not learn of the buyback or the purpose of the buyback until March 2019 when I received an email from Meryl Friedman, a paralegal working for Verizon. In response to a demand letter that I issued under Massachusetts General Law Chapter 93A in January, Friedman revealed that buyback and threatened that Verizon would make the account reappear on my credit reports unless I agreed to waive all my monetary claims against Verizon under federal and state laws. I have refused her offer. I believe it was made in sheer malice and was outright bullying and coercion that amounted to unfair commercial behavior prohibited under Massachusetts General Law Chapter 93A, sections 2 and 9. Astoundingly, Friedman's letter also suggested that Verizon's investigation learned that I was affiliated with the property address – which is a matter of public record and what I first told Verizon three years ago. That Verizon's investigation only recently resurfaced and started to parrot my original statement to Verizon is a piece of Kafkaesque absurdity and plainly attests to how little and how triflingly Verizon conducted its "investigation".
11. This proposal from Verizon also helps to explain a quizzical remark from Rita Johnson at Executive Response when she tried to cajole me to continue my cooperation with the Account Verification Center despite having seen their many missteps and incompetence: I ought to work with the Account Verification Center, Johnson said, because she believed Verizon could continue to wreck havoc with my credit because Verizon could make the account reappear on my credit reports even after the credit bureaus delete it. Despite the affected kindness in Johnson's voice, the coercive and retaliatory gesture in Verizon's recent settlement proposal makes it clear that Verizon had always intended its actions on the account buyback to be weaponized and turned into a tool of coercion and blackmail. That Verizon realized back in August 2017 that it could buy back the disputed account and weaponize it in potential litigations shows also that its failure to reasonably investigate the account in the latter half of 2017 was by no means just oversight or negligence but really an act of bad faith with an intent to defame, slander, and to injure, which is punishable under 15 U.S.C. 1681g(e)(1) . Moreover, in purchasing a debt merely to sit on it and use it as a tool to intimidate consumers and to escape legal consequences of Verizon's wrongdoing, Verizon also violated Fair Debt Collection Practices Act 15 U.S.C. 1692e (5) as well as New York Consolidated Laws General Business Laws sections 601 and 604-A that govern similar debt collection behavior.

15. I further claim emotional anguish associated with the effort to restore my credit and the anxiety of searching for a home in one of the nation's biggest and most expensive real estate markets and the fear of not being able to find an affordable home or an affordable mortgage to support its purchase. The countless futile trips I made in summer and fall 2017 to see new homes coming onto the market brought endless physical aches but overall tended to numb my body, a numbness that was nevertheless from time to time pierced by the horrific apprehension that a bunch of impatient, incompetent, inexperienced entry-level customer service people at Verizon, who constantly self-contradicted, contradicted superiors and were in turn contradicted by superiors, might yet have obtained total and complete control over the financial future of me and my family and could whimsically decide whether I deserve a home to call my own in the city. Verizon's representatives felt free to query me endlessly about my personal and financial history, only to then quickly discount and trivialize this history in their refusal to carry out a reasonable investigation and an even cursory inspection of their own business records. I felt defamed in the beginning, and then violated, and eventually belittled, trashed, and hopeless for that deeply personal violation. That Verizon now sought to intimidate me and coerce me into giving up my claims in its recent proposal to trade its future ability to damage my credit for my agreement to release Verizon of the legal consequences of its earlier wrongdoings adds insult to injury and should open Verizon to claims under 15 U.S.C. 1681g(e)(1), 1681h(e) and 1692e (5) as well as New York Consolidated Laws General Business Laws sections 601 and 604-A. I therefore sue for $200,000 for malicious and intentional defamation, invasion of privacy, and for the emotional distress I suffered and for punitive damages.
16. The same coercive tactics Verizon threatened on me this year further entitles me to punitive damages under Massachusetts General Law Chapter 93A. I therefore sue for $157,987.4 in punitive damages on top of $78,993.7 that is the total of the damages I suffered for loss of time and credit opportunities.
17. Lastly, I ask for award of potential court costs, attorney fees and other exemplary and punitive penalties that the court deems suitable to assess against Verizon.
